carries her observation on it further than usual, by tracing it down to the minutiæ of conduct, in every instance of action in which we are interested; which she asserts to be in all, none being to be held indifferent; being of opinion with Dr. Young

That noughts' a trifle;

"Having said so much in her favour, I will tell thee with much openness, what I seem to see amiss in her. In her private character, nothing. As a preacher, her style is rather too learned, and some of her epithets rather swell too much. There is something, too, in the management & tone of her voice, when she exerts it, a little theatrical. She resembles Milton in being too free with technical words. But I really believe all this to be owing to her education, & not to any affectation or want of simplicity. She has a perfect acquaintance with the world, being what is called thorough well-bred."
