

The mystery was soon solved. Joseph Smith came into the Friends' Central Offices, 12, Bishopsgate Without, with a copy of the newspaper, and with some excitement exclaimed, "That is our old burial ground at Long Acre—John Whiting was buried there." The Surveyor for the district was communicated with, and very kindly gave his assistance and sanction for the removal of the bones. By subsequent order of the Six Weeks Meeting (the finance committee of London and Middlesex Quarterly Meeting) some 510 skulls and portions of other bones were removed and re-interred in the Friends' Burial Ground, Isleworth, and over them was placed a stone, with a suitable inscription, giving the history of the re-interment.⁹

A New Book on George Fox.

Selected events on the life of George Fox are presented with much freshness by Ernest E. Taylor in his Cameos from the Life of George Fox (Headley, small 8vo, pp. 119). The book is a reprint of the articles which appeared last year in The Friend (Lond.), with considerable additions. The illustrations represent George Fox, Oliver Cromwell, James Nayler, Preston Patrick Meeting-house, Scarborough Castle, Swarthmore Hall, and a page of the MSS. Journal of George Fox. The index was prepared in D.
