

in the transactions of trade reposed the most implicit confidence in his integrity, and the eulogiums upon his name which are now heard from every tongue exhibit a striking and memorable instance of that homage which is ever the reward of goodness of heart and rectitude of conduct. He was religious without parade, generous without ostentation, and dignified by the constant practice of the endearing virtue of Christian humility. To say that such a man filled the different relations of domestic life with honour to himself and pleasure to those that surrounded him and that his memory, like that of the just amongst whom he is enrolled, will be in everlasting remembrance, would be a superfluous tribute to his worth but from the hope that the contemplation of such a character may stimulate others to imitate his virtues and to follow his example. His mortal frame was long borne down by disease; but the mind survived and has now passed to another and better world.

“ It was computed that there was from 8,000 to 10,000 people, old and young, attended his funeral; the windows of the different shops were almost all shut.

“ He was interred about one o'clock on Friday, January 24th, 1812.”—(Birnie's Chronicle.)

Information from the late J. Pim Strangman, of London.

250 Years of London Yearly Meeting

The meeting referred to on page 1 was held as arranged, and was attended by about one thousand persons. Robert H. Marsh presided and papers were read by William C. Braithwaite, A. Neave Brayshaw, Mary J. Godlee, and Edward Grubb. A memorial volume is in preparation.