Our Quotation—12

“ These critics of ours who harshly review the books we write, the addresses we give, the schemes of reform for which we work so strenuously—do they do nothing for us? On the contrary, they force us to go deeper, to write with more care, to reconsider our hasty generalisations. . . . They may speak as ‘enemies’ and they may show a stern and hostile face; but we do well to love them, for they enable us to find our better self and our deeper powers.”

R. M. JONES, Spiritual Energies in Daily Life, 1922, p. 29.

Editor's Notes

BY the kindness of ex-President Charles F. Jenkins, of Philadelphia, Pa., we are able to send, free, to all our members with this issue of THE JOURNAL, a copy of the address which was delivered at the Annual Meeting in 1922, considerably enlarged, entitled: “Tortola: A Quaker Experiment of Long Ago in the Tropics.”

This book will form Supplement 13 to THE JOURNAL.¹

We hope that during this year some action may be entered upon which will fitly commemorate the ter-centenary of the birth of George Fox and assist the work of THE JOURNAL in disseminating information respecting the history of Friends.

¹ Copies may be obtained through the Bookshop for five shillings ($1.25), post free.
