

point to unsuspected connections; the local historian can reveal activities particular to a district and regional evidence of more general application. This Journal should also aim to present documents and historical papers in reliable shape so that the general historian will have readily available a corpus of knowledge faithfully presented on which he can base his conclusions.

We would encourage all our members to aid the Historical Society to play its part more fully by bringing to our notice current events, exhibitions, historical papers and any information which will aid in a more adequate presentation of Quaker history.
